CITY SPECIALS.

Dally increase of butterine sales—never before have the manufacturers of butterine awaited the opening of the fall and whiter trade with more hopeful anticipations or brighter prospects than at present. The official statistics of the Internal Revenue show a total production of butterine for the last fiscal year over 50,000,000 pounds, with only 2,000,000 for exportation. This exhibit is merely to show the amount of patterine consumed in this country, and at the same time it conclusively proves that there must be a great deal of merit in the article or class the sales would not be so large and daily on the increase.

The company that manufactures this article established an agency in this city about two years ago, with Mr. Heishaw as their agent. Since that time he was withdrawn and Mr. Klein was appointed his successor, and the business flourished under his management to such an extent that the sales are doubled daily at his elegant stalls, 349, 350, 351 Centre Market. Mr. Kiein could, if so desired, often sell butterine for butter, as the appearance and taste is very similar, but he prefers to sell it on its trade merits, and he is not in the butter trade. These are the ploneer stalls for the sale of butterine in the National Capital. It was at this stand that butterine customers were numbered at first by a small count, now they are numbered at first by a small count, now they are numbered city. Batterine customers were numbered at first by a small count, now they are numbered by the hundreds right in the heart of the Na-tion's Capital, and its customers are among the best people in the city.

Little indeed does one-half the world know canaille. Avenue and alley is as far separated of Colonel Moore, to Atlantic City, where

These tortuous alleys that honeycomb most of the squares in the thickly-populated sections of the city are the nurseries and refuges The moonbeams slanted down into one of these alleys Saturday night and lighted a scene in which the avenue and the alley met and quarreled and vilified each other, and, as the battle was waged on the ground of the alley, the alley was telepromy. the alley was victorious. On the east side of the alley, bathed in the moon's light, was a small house with three windows and a door, each one of which hore the stamp of poverty-stricken disreputability. On the uneven cobblestones of the alley stood a woman, middle-aged, neatly dressed and lady-like in manner, her appearance bearsing the unmistakable story of respectability. She had rapped several times on the greasy door of the hovel and was flually answered by a female voice from a window over the door. The lady stepped back and asked in a feiguly quiet voice if Mr. ---, mentioning her sband's name, was there.

The figure in the window was thrown into bold relief as it leaned on its cibows and looked down from the window by a low-turned gas jet in the room. The moon looked down from the window by a low-turned gas jet in the room. The moon streamed over her black, crinkly hair and whitened the deep reliow of her bare, plump shoulders and round neck. As she heard the man's name mentioned a change came over her face and she said "No. What should he be here for?" But the expression of exultant hate that shone in every line of her hand-somely-moulded face gave the lie to her own The lady down on the cobblestones looked up and saw the sparkle of the black eyes and the shining white teeth exposed by the octoroon's flendish smile and lost her composure. She demanded admission to the house so that she might satisfy herself of her husband's presence or absence.

The octoroon turned to whisper a question to some one in the room, and when she again looked at the woman on the cobblestones it was with an expression that was maddening to the frenzied wife, and she taunted her with the vilest things that such a woman could say to a wife. The wife lost all control of her-self, became hysterical, threw herself against the locked and bolted door and sobbed and prayed and blasphemed in the excess of her agony.

"If I could only get in—if I could only find him," she cried. "I know he is there; they said he was there. Oh, if I could only get And all the time the octoroon looked down

And all the time the octoroon looked down from her window and taunted the wife, and every line of the yellow face, the bare neck and shoulders, the jetty eyes and hair, and the white teeth grinning at her in the moonlight, burned into the wife's brain like vitriol.

A policeman passed through the alley, and the wife ran to him and begged him, almost on her knees, to break into the octoroon's house and allow her to search for her husband. But the noliceman was powerless, and as the

But the policeman was powerless, and as the woman would not be quiet and continued her bysterical raving, refusing to go home, he was compelled to take her to the station-house.

Her arrest seemed to quiet her and clear her brain, and her face settled into an expression of determined hatred that was startling in the face that had been so pleasant in its quiet matronliness.

She gave the station-keeper an assumed name, and took $5 from her well-filled pocket-book and left it as collateral for her appearance in Police Court.
She left the station-house quietly, and, get ting into a cab on the Avenue, told the driver a number on a respectable street and asked him to hurry. And as the cab rolled through the quiet streets the "cabby" heard her sob-bing as only a heart-broken woman can sob. A Specimen of One of the Army of Disap-

"It is a strange fate that seems to pursue them," said the clerk, moralizing a little, "and I often feel sorry for them. Many of the office-seekers who come here are young men from country towns, and have never had any experience of city life, and in the first flush of excitement, at the prospect of a Government situation, they begin to celebrate, and they keep it up as their spirits wane and disappointment meets them."

Another Specimen Visitor to be Found at the Hotel. A party of excursionists from Kentucky registered at one of the up-town hotels recently. They were of the extreme backwoods type, and when told the rates were $4 per day, their eyes bulged out considerably. "Wall," said the spokesman of the party, "thar is nine of us. Kaint you let us down a leetle lighter,

The polite and affable clerk told them that he would, in that case, put them down for $3.50 per day.
"Wall," said the big spokesman, "we hevel hed our brekfast, and don't want no dinner;

Kin you let the day commence with supper? To this the clerk assented also. In the party was a youngster of about 15 years, and he had been looking around the lobby with eyes that showed surprise in them wherever he glanced, and finally glanced upon the card holders on the counter. After fingering them nervously for awhile, and feeling the weight of them, his curiosity got the bet-ter of him and be lifted one to his mouth and closed a beautiful pair of ivory teeth on the edge of the plate. After giving a good hard bite and noting the impression of his teeth, he turned to another lad in the party and dryl remarked: "Solid silver, Jim, by gum."

AUGUST BARGAINS.

We are preparing the store for the reception of Fall Stock, so are anxious to close out our entire stock of strictly summer goods, and are willing to let them go at greatly reduced prices. Mid summer Clearance sale of Ladies White India Linen Suits, Fancy Sateen and Fine Gingham Suits and Woolen Dresses, which we have marked at greatly reduced prices, with a view of closing them out prior to the arrival of fall stock.

Nearly all, if not every, single suit in stock has been reduced in price, and this offers a grand opportunity to secure a new dress at a merely nominal sum.

To-day we call attention to the following, well worth your attention:

LADIES' WHITE SUITS REDUCED.

LADIES' WHITE SUITS REDUCED.

Every suit must be sold, and if a low price be any inducement these should be sold immediately. Remember, we have reduced the price on every White Suit in stock.
